Please be sure to follow our recommendations on how to use essential oils for baby room nursery with your humidifier. Failure to do so may cause damage to defects or humidifiers or even damage to children. The skin of young children or children is very sensitive. Thin, sensitive skin is much more cross-shifter to essential oils than the skin of an older child or adult. Too much weakening can cause skin irritation and other problems later down the road. Therefore, before applying essential oils to children, it is important to understand the proper dilution ratio and application methods. Even when essential oils are diluted with carrier oil, they can cause skin irritation and sun sensitivity, especially in children. It is recommended that a patch test (also sometimes called a spot test) performed on the skin, each introduced with new oil. How to test your baby's response to oil? Apply a very small amount of diluted essential oil on your baby's skin on the leg or on waiting for about 24 hours and check any signs of irritation, redness or swelling if you notice a reaction, stop using that particular oil If the child has no reaction, you can proceed using that oil. Safety tips for children/children Essential oils need to be used with proper care and precautions to avoid any risk. We recommend limiting the spread to 30-60 minutes, several times a day as needed. Due to strong concentration, there are many essential oils that may not be best for your child at a specific age. It is best to make sure that you discuss with your child doctor about which are the best child-friendly essential oils that are ideal for your little one. Also get usage instructions as not all oils can be used on all routes. Essential oils should be kept out of the reach of your child to prevent accidental ingestion. Make sure you buy good quality essential oil from a reliable brand. Do not expose children directly to sunlight after using essential oils such as citrus oils, as it can cause severe irritation, rash or pigmentation on the skin. Make sure the room is well ventilated so the oils in the room are not very powerful. If you find that the oil is potent, you will need to reduce the amount being used. How to add water to humidifier for infants? Turn the water tank upside down. Remove the tank cap and fill the tank with clean and cold water.
